Is A Blow Against The Treaty

MILITARY CONTROL

Abolition of Extra-Territorial Rights for Foreigners
Proclaimed

SHANGHAI, June 24—In a blow against treaty rights of the United States, Great Britain and other major foreign powers today took over judicial as well as military control of the occupied areas in China.

Abolition of all extra-territorial rights for foreigners was proclaimed. Under the principle of extra-territoriality, granted the United States following the Boxer uprising, America maintains her own courts in Shanghai, and other principal cities where American citizens are tried.

The announcement grew out of Wednesday's incident in which a Japanese sentry allegedly slapped an American missionary, Dr. J. C. Thompson.

Charges Administration With Seeking Self-Perpetuation

SELLERSVILLE, June 24—U. S. Senator James J. Davis, in an address here last evening, charged the Democratic Administration with seeking to perpetuate itself in power, rather than to serve the people.

Speaking to an audience of 2,000, as a feature of the bicentennial program, the senator was eagerly listened to.

"This Administration has given relief but it has not created jobs or encouraged business," he said. "We need sound leadership based on the experience of the past 10 years. Business will move forward only after the Government has been stabilized. The answer to our difficulties lies in the Republican party."

A PLEA FOR SAFETY ON INDEPENDENCE DAY

Article By National Safety
Council Made Public By
Burgess Anderson

CAUTIONS THE PUBLIC

Joining in the campaign to reduce accidents, Burgess Clifford L. Anderson today released a plea from the National Safety Council. The plea is entitled "A New Declaration of Independence."

In accompanying literature the National Safety Council states July accidents last year took a toll of 10,200 lives. This huge total is due largely to the alarming number of deaths each year from motoring, swimming and fireworks celebrations over the Independence Day holiday. This year July 4th comes on a Monday, which means a week-end holiday with its threat of even greater tragedy.

Burgess Anderson makes public a resolution adopted by the Council. It reads as follows:

Whereas one hundred and sixty-two years ago citizens of the thirteen United States declared their independence on the basis of their right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and

Whereas each year their descendants celebrate the birth of this independence by wholesale sacrifice of life, and

Whereas in place of life, liberty and happiness we have death, destruction and tragedy, and the irony of many more Americans slaughtered in celebrating their independence than died in the war that gained it, and

Whereas last year 10,200 men, women and children were killed in July—many of them in this Independence Day jambores—and

Whereas this year, with a week-end prolonging the holiday, there is no reason to hope for a less bloody toll—unless we awake to the danger and put the brakes on our headlong dash into destruction, and

Whereas the Fourth of July toll, shocking as it is, merely signals the opening of a month which year after year leaves strewn behind it a greater list of dead and injured than any other month of the twelve;

Therefore Be It Resolved that the National Safety Council call on America to cut down this mid-Summer massacre by signing a new Declaration of Independence—Independence from the annual tribute of tens of thousands of American lives needlessly sacrificed . . . independence from the kind of celebration that leaves us the dead and the sightless and the suffering, and

Be It Further Resolved that the Executive Committee of the National Safety Council call on every citizen of the United States to do his or her part in this new independence from death and disaster by being careful and considerate of others on the streets and highways, whether walking or driving, by being careful while boating or

A Dog-Gone Experience

(By "The Stroller")
A Cornwells Heights family which advertised that its dog had been lost, has found the animal—in the attic.

For four days various members of the family watched for the dog's return, waited for telephone calls in answer to the "ad," and inquired among their friends.

Then an errand to the attic revealed the resting place of the canine during the hot spell. "And there wasn't a 'yap' out of him in all that time," states the dog's master in disgust.

The National Real Estate Clearing House reports the sale of two farms in Ivyland, near the Huntingdon Valley Hunt Club, to Philadelphia.

Purchased by A. Monroe was the 66-acre farm of Joseph L. Smith, containing a century-old Colonial farm house, residence of 13 rooms, with outbuildings. The ground has many fine old shade trees, a spring, an acre of fine woodland, while the farm is under cultivation with a yield of wheat, corn, hay and general produce. The property was held for $13,200.

The 24-acre farm of Anna R. Jamison, with four acres in meadows and pasture land and the rest in high state of cultivation, with a creek flowing in front of the buildings, was purchased by John J. Brabazon. The property contains a stone Colonial residence of 11 rooms, with a garage and outbuildings. The farm was held at $12,000.

A large barn on the property of E. I. Quick, Fourth and Callowhill streets, Perkasie, was destroyed by fire early Monday night. The origin of the blaze is unknown.

A considerable quantity of hay was stored in the structure and caused the flames to spread rapidly. When the Perkasie Fire Company arrived on the scene the barn was beyond saving, and the firemen concentrated their efforts on preventing the flames from spreading to nearby small buildings.

There was no livestock kept in the barn, and all the farm machinery was removed before the flames reached that part of the building.

The property was formerly known as the John Freed farm.

Sixty strings of lights and 1800 bulbs, which were used during the Doylestown Centennial celebration, were purchased at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, at Doylestown.

AWARD SIX CHILDREN $528,729 INHERITANCE

Sum is From Three Estates For
The Heirs of Mrs.
Houston Dunn

FORMER RESIDENT HERE

The six children of Mrs. Houston Dunn, a former resident of Bristol, have been awarded an inheritance of $528,729 in the Orphans Court of Philadelphia.

Within the last week they have declared heirs to three estates left by relatives of their mother, who was formerly Elizabeth Elmslie Taylor.

The latest and largest of the fortunes before the court for distribution was left by Alice J. Taylor, aunt of Mrs. Dunn. Miss Taylor died in 1918. Her will created trust funds of over $500,000 each for Mrs. Dunn and for a grand niece, Miss Alice Taylor Wharton.

Miss Wharton became ill while engaged in ambulance work abroad at about the end of the World War. She has never recovered, and a guardian is in charge of her property. Her breakdown was attributed to war experiences. If she dies childless the children of Mrs. Dunn will inherit her interest in the Alice Taylor estate.

Mrs. Dunn, a former president of the Philadelphia Grand Opera Company, died December 20.

Her children are Houston, Jr., C. Newbold, Anthony T., Elizabeth, Alice and Jonathan Dickinson Dunn.

Several days ago they were awarded $40,000 outright from the estate of their great uncle, Benjamin J. Taylor, and half the income from a trust of $109,156 in the estate of their grand-mother, Mrs. Caroline F. Taylor, widow of Anthony Taylor.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

No Place For An Agent

Washington, June 23.

UNDER White House pressure, two new and highly important Federal offices were created by the last Congress, which will affect a vast number of people and which the President is shortly expected to fill.

Perhaps he already knows whom he will name, but no hint yet has been given.

BOTH of these officials will have great power and responsibility. One is the new administrator of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. He will, in effect, be the czar of the air, and a Federal regulation of flying such as has not been thought of before will be instituted. The other new official is the administrator provided for in the highly controversial wages and hours law. The scope and authority which he will yield is very great, indeed. In some ways he easily will be the most important single Federal official outside the Cabinet.

SO far as the Aeronautics Authority is concerned, the understanding is that the President has turned the organization of this commission and the picking of its personnel over to his son James, who is now at the Mayo Clinic for treatment, but expected soon to be "on the job" again. It is a rather unusual thing to do, but there it is. It is an open secret in Washington that "Jimmy" is handling this proposition by himself. As to the wage-and-hour administrator, that is a different story. That's no job for a boy. That, the President will

Pictures Show No Foul Blows

New York, June 24—Max Schmeling, after a good night's sleep, awoke at Polyclinic Hospital today to learn that motion pictures of the Joe Louis fight disproved his claim of a foul. The picture disclosed that the title holder threw no illegal punches, and that Schmeling, who suffered a fractured transverse process of the third lumbar vertebra, was beaten thoroughly before Louis shot two hard punches to the challenger's left side, as Max dangled on the ropes. Hospital officials reported that Schmeling's temperature and respiration have returned to normal, and although the pain of his injury is sharp at times, he is resting comfortably.

Search For Medill McCormick

Albuquerque, N. M., June 24—Search for Medill McCormick, scion of the Chicago publishing family, was extended today to all sections of New Mexico, when no trace of the youth was found in the Sandia mountains north of here, where he had been reported on a hiking trip.

Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick Simms, the youth's mother, said the greatest anxiety was that the boy may have been overtaken in a severe storm that raged in the rugged mountains yesterday, and was suffering from exposure. Young McCormick, accompanied by Richard Whitmer, 21, of Albuquerque, left here Wednesday forenoon in an automobile. They planned to drive about 15 miles into the mountains, and then hike to the rim of the Sandia range.

DOGS TO ACCOMPANY WOMAN TO HEARING

Mrs. Hilda Yelland, Trenton,
To Take Trio of Canines
With Her

IN CASE SHE IS JAILED

"I fully intend to take my three Pomeranians to the hearing with me this evening, and if I go to jail they will go with me."

So stated Mrs. Hilda Yelland, 588 Hutchinson street, Trenton, N. J., as she spoke of her forthcoming hearing this evening at Feasterville, when a case will be heard regarding her alleged failure to halt at a "stop" sign in Feasterville a few days ago.

"Yes, Black Samjo, Marie and Sissy will be with me when I reach Feasterville for the hearing, and I'll have my suit-case also, just in case," she added.

"I will absolutely refuse to pay a fine, and if they send me to jail in Bucks County they will have to take my dogs, too, for they can't get along without me. They need my care, as I'm always with them, and no one else can care for them as they are accustomed to being cared for," emphatically stated the hazel-eyed Mrs. Yelland, in speaking of the case.

The Trentonian, who is rather plump, and 5'-4" tall, is most indignant at what she claims a great injustice.

"I did stop at the intersection," she adds. "I was slightly beyond the 'stop' sign, but I had not yet reached the intersection," she told in regard to the case. "And when the officer told me I had failed to stop, I called his attention to the fact that I hadn't yet entered the intersection when I did stop, and was just beyond the sign."

Then she added: "But I am told by many who have called me that they make a habit in that section of arresting drivers of New Jersey cars, and I have yet to hear of one Pennsylvania car being halted for such an offense in that area."

Mrs. Yelland states that the summons she received has a fine marked on it of $8. "But I won't pay any fine. I'll go to jail first."

Mrs. Yelland is prepared to spend a "vacation" in Bucks County Jail, if need be, all depending upon decision of the officials at her hearing in the office of Justice of the Peace Parsons, at Feasterville, this evening at seven o'clock.

"It's about time someone started a campaign against these small towns which seem to pick on out-of-state drivers to build up their coffers," in her opinion. "I've been driving for 10 years, and this is the first time anyone has found fault with my driving," she continued.

The officer making the arrest, Charles Greely, claims that the Trentonian neglected to halt at the junction of routes 213 and 532, when en route from Trenton, N. J., to Willow Grove. With her at the time was her invalid mother.

In regard to her husband's ideas in the matter, Mrs. Yelland said "He's not interested."

And of the case Officer Greely says: "We don't care whether they're from New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, or any other place. There is no campaign. We're only arresting those who think they own Jersey and Pennsylvania both."

FOOTNOTE ON MAN'S PROGRESS

One line of the story about the Spanish Insurgent offensive along the coast toward Valencia says briefly, "Sagunto is in ruins."

We fancy that some such message may well have gone out from Sagunto 2,100 years ago, for it was the city of the valiant in the Carthaginian wars. Hannibal laid his greatest siege there, and nearly lost his life in doing it—Sagunto lost 50,000 people, its entire population. When further resistance was impossible, they burned their treasures and rushed into the enemy's camp, impaling themselves on their spears.

This second destruction of Sagunto to only a footnote to history because it was never more than a village after Hannibal sacked it. If it is indeed a ruin, we suggest that the Saguntians give up, and leave it that way. Its wreckage would be the perfect memorial to war, and far more appropriate than the piles of bronze and marble that usually arise after the peace.

War is a shambles, now as in Hannibal's day. We should be permitted to remember it that way. Its triumphant memorials may beautify a landscape, but the dead do not feel triumph over the dead.

SAFE TRANSPORTATION

The railroad wreck in Montana with its appalling loss of life, serves by contrasts to emphasize the relative safety of American railroads. In most European nations such wrecks are quite common. The Montana wreck, however, was the first in which a paying passenger was killed on the Burlington road in twenty years.

It was not always thus. Many middle-aged people can remember when disastrous train wrecks, entailing loss of life, were quite common. And in this latest wreck the elements were almost wholly responsible. Custer creek, almost dry a few minutes before, was suddenly turned into a raging torrent by a cloudburst.

The American railroads have developed an enviable safety record, and their service is the best in the World. It is to be regretted that politicians and labor unions, into whose clutches the roads were delivered during the World War under the cloak of patriotism, have been permitted by an indifferent populace to drag the Nation's vast network of railroads to the brink of ruin.

FLOODS THE Foe NOW

The mighty Yellow River teaches Chinese and Japanese that Nature possesses greater powers of dealing death and devastation than cannon bombs and all the modern war machinery. Cabled accounts of Japanese armies saving instead of taking Chinese lives in the flood decidedly improves on the news that has been coming from China.

There would seem to be hope that, in the presence of a catastrophe, joint relief efforts may allay enmity and create a state of thought from which a peace acceptable to Japan and China can ensue.

A doctor who mingles with the statesmen says this has been the healthiest Congress in his recollection. We can see by the expense sheet that its appetite is marvelous.

If further British ships are sunk off Spain, the matter will be taken up directly with the Duce. It would dispose of the fiction that termites have been doing it.

GRAND

A distinctly "different" type of musical drama is heralded in "Joy of Living," new musical comedy with Irene Dunne and Douglass Fairbanks, Jr., and with new Jerome Kern melodies woven into the brightly plot, now at the Grand Theatre.

The story deals with a stormy romance between Miss Dunne, a popular musical comedy star whose huge income is lavished on her selfish family, and Fairbanks, a self-confident young man, who has disinherited his rich relatives to become a sort of sea vagabond, who preaches a doctrine of attaining happiness by doing what you want to do.

Believing her duty lies in letting her parents and her sister have their own way, and in working to the limit of her endurance in order to satisfy their rapacious demands, Miss Dunne quarrels violently with Fairbanks when he urges her to throw her family overboard and learn to enjoy herself. And his unconventional efforts to convince her make for delightful complications in the story and lead to its gripping climax when she at last sees her relatives in their true light.

BRISTOL

When the motion picture delves into the past to extract an entertainment, it must be cautious that all details must be accurate. Backgrounds and costume must unite the era. No liberties may be taken with history.

In producing Walter Wanger's "52nd Street," now at the Bristol Theatre, which features Ian Hunter, Leo Carrillo, Pat Paterson and Zasu Pitts, Hollywood exercised painstaking care that this cavalcade of New York's night clubs that begins in 1912 and continues through the year to the present day be authentic in every minute particular.

The Wanger research staff fine-combed data for information. In addition, the advisory services of Al Shean, surviving member of the famous Gallagher and Shean headline combination, Jack White and Sid Silvers, all of whom have lived in the mid-town section of New York the greater part of their lives, were obtained.

YARDLEY

Six children were baptized at the morning worship at the Yardley Methodist Church on Sunday: Janet Marie Waterson, Marjorie Ann Sands; and Thomas, John, Helen and Marjorie Mershon, children of Mr. and Mrs. Wilfred Mershon.

SYNOPSIS

Ned Holden, son of a Yankee mother and an American missionary, looks the typical American tourist on his first trip to the Orient. Yet he had been brought up in Asia. Officially an ethnologist, he is actually a secret service man. Back from a dangerous expedition, Holden now plans a long holiday in Bangkok, Siam, among the Americans there. He meets Virginia Griffin, from St. Louis, Missouri; Daniel Griffin, noted Oriental art collector; his secretary and Virginia's fiancé, André Chambon. Immediately attracted to Virginia, Holden is planning a sight-seeing jaunt with her when he learns of the theft of the famous Emerald Buddha from the royal temple. Revolution may result if the Buddha cannot be restored to its shrine before the Siamese winter festival six weeks hence. Virginia's father is suspected. The next day Holden searches the hotel rooms of his new friends. Virginia returns unexpectedly and finds him there. Unable to give the true explanation of his presence, Ned allows the girl he already loves to believe him a common hotel thief. Soon the Griffin party prepares to leave for a motor trip through French Indo-China, with the ancient city of Laos as their destination. Griffin hires as interpreter a Laotian named T'Fan, recommended by the French governor. T'Fan, really Holden in disguise, hints his suspicions of Chambon to the Governor. Holden swears to restore the Buddha of Royal Siam to its temple.

CHAPTER IX

Soon after, the caravan got under way. At Virginia's suggestion—there was balm in Gilead—Ned was given one of the folding chairs in the front car, Griffin beside him and the girl and her lover behind, all in reach of his voice.

As he rode along, Ned tried to assemble his facts and fit them together. But they were colored stones from a broken mosaic vase; only the artist who conceived it could trace its fantastic pattern.

Was Chambon himself the unknown victor of that fatal sword-play in a grove in France, avenging his mother's wrongs? There he sat, gobbling a mango, dripping juice and talking with gay charm. Was the theft of the Emerald Buddha the act of a fanatical art collector? But back on the baggage truck rode My Lord the Leopard, dressed like a coolie! Was Griffin a confederate to the plot, or its victim? Just now he was busy licking into smoke-like shape the broken wrapper of a big black cigar. Was he, Ned, on the trail of the stolen Buddha, or off on the maddest, wildest goose chase of his career? But for the moment he was more concerned whether the nicest and prettiest girl he had ever met loved Viconte Chambon past all care or cure.

Griffin lit his cigar and broke a long silence. "André, my boy, I've been guessing hard, but I can't make it."

"Do not guess any more right now," Chambon answered quickly. "Look at the scenery."

But Griffin, bless his heart, blundered cheerfully on. "You said it would be the prize of a lifetime, the thing we're going to get in Laos. Still I can't figure it out."

Chambon turned carelessly to Ned. "T'Fan: I hope to provide a surprise in the way of a souvenir for Monsieur Griffin. It has no special pecuniary value, but great interest for an antiquary."

"Yes, Tuan," Ned answered respectfully. But his eyes were glittering.

And now the changing country changed the subject. The level delta-lands dropped behind; brush-grown hills rose.

Further on they saw a village, little and obscure at the edge of the deep woods. A score of thatched-roof houses perched on stilts; a few weed-grown fields of rice and maize; a group of small, dark, heavy-jawed men, all but naked, staring with sunken dull eyes at the passing cars

... How many like it Ned had seen! How many more, before he could return to his own lost world!

"They are Khas, wild people," he explained. "Mostly they live on tops of our mountains. In the days of our kingdom they were slaves, but the kings died and the French set them free."

"Good for the French!" Griffin exclaimed.

But Chambon looked scornful. "We were fools to interfere. The Laotians are a great people of ancient culture and superb art. Why shouldn't they make slaves of those jungle monkeys? If the kingdom is ever restored, they'll be slaves again."

"Heaven-Born, did you see the Emerald Buddha in the temple at Bangkok?"

"You go in mighty hard for ancient art and superb culture," Virginia broke in, with more feeling than the occasion seemed to warrant. "I much prefer living human beings."

Ned decided to remember this conversation. The scattered thickets gave way to impenetrable jungle. The road ran as between sheer walls of wondrously carved green jade.

It was an old story to Ned, a pleasantly exciting story, but Virginia felt a vague growing dismay. Her vague uneasiness changed to a creepy foreboding . . . as though they were plunging into some tremendous, perilous adventure, instead of a mere auto trip through Indo-China. She felt queerly alone, too; her father was nodding; Chambon suddenly seemed like a stranger. Some man she had never met looked out of his eyes, as they climbed further into these mysterious jungle-grown hills.

No one was left but the native interpreter, T'Fan, a brown man long-haired and ear-ringed. Still—and this was bewildering—the sight of him seemed to comfort her, to make everything all right.

At sundown they drove into a little walled fort near the summit of the range and only two hours' journey from the Laotian frontier. Here a grizzled army officer greeted the visitors.

The three white people must remain for dinner. T'Fan and the servants could cook their own meal at the rest-house, half a mile beyond, and make the beds and hang the nets for the night. But Virginia felt childishly disappointed. Not until they were at table, and the Frenchman was pouring his prized Burgundy, was she glad she had stayed.

"I am not sure it's a good time for tourists to visit Laos," he said out of a clear sky.

Virginia said nothing, but watched every face, not quite knowing why. "What do you mean, Captain?" Chambon asked.

The officer looked long at his plate. "What I mean, has no meaning. It is only a shadow. Had I not lived a generation in these hills I could not see it myself. But pots are boiling in Laos."

"You don't think—revolution?" Griffin asked.

"Impossible. There are only a few millions left, and all they do is dream. But the excitement has reached my Kha villagers; I hear their drums at all hours."

WALTERS PITCHES FINE GAME FOR LANDRETH IX

The House of David, of Ann Arbor, Michigan, blanked the Landreth Seeds last night at Landreth Ball Park, 1-0.

The game was a great pitching duel between Janesko, a veteran of many seasons on the mound for the visitors, holding the Farmers to six well scattered hits, pitted against Walters, Landreth's youthful star, who allowed just three hits and struck out eight.

The beads put on their first real scoring threat in the fourth inning when they loaded the bases with one out on two bases on balls and Cosaccio's hit but a fine bit of fielding by Camel Breslin frustrated the attempt. Taking Woods' long fly Breslin made a perfect throw to Broderick to double up Kolet attempting to score after the catch, retiring the side.

The visitors' lone run came in the following inning when the Farmers' defense cracked wide open. Menendez safe on Barcelona's error. Walters fanned Henville and forced Janesko to fly to Dougherty. Kittleman hit to right field, putting Menendez on third. With two strikes on Kolet, Broderick foolishly threw to second to catch Kittleman stealing. Liberatore's relay home was late and Menendez scored. Kolet then struck out on the next pitch retiring the side.

Vaun and Breslin fielded well, each making some fine running catches.

The game was stopped after the seventh inning, while the House of David put on their famous "Pepper game" or baseball juggling act, which greatly amused the spectators.

Landreth Seeds will play a twilight game at Bridgeton, N. J., this evening. The Pittsburgh Crawfords, one of the fastest colored teams of the National Negro League will play Landreth's next Thursday at Landreth Ball Park.

ST. ANN'S RALLIES TO WIN OVER SUPERIOR ZINC

BRISTOL TWILIGHT LEAGUE
GRUNDY'S-ODD FELLOWS
(Edgely diamond)

Umpire, Della; scorer, June.

The Superior Zinc team outdid the St. Ann's A. A. nine last evening on the Grundy field but the Saints put on their usual late rally and by scoring four tallies managed to eke out a close 5-4 victory. The tilt marked the opening of the second half race.

Superior made ten hits, nine off McGahan and one from the delivery of Charlie Whyno. The latter received credit for the victory as the Saints were trailing when he went into the box. Ralph Stromp and Punkie Zeffries pitched for Superior with the former being charged with his second defeat of the season.

LANGHORNE LEGION NINE DEFEATS BRISTOL, 1-0

In what proved to be a very exciting and colorful ball game Bristol went down to defeat at the hands of Langhorne American Legion, 1 to 0, last evening. It was one of those old fashioned pitching duels between Leo Riley of Bristol and Herman Pluma of Langhorne. The game was played with Bristol getting three hits to Langhorne's two, but Bristol erred twice to Langhorne's once. Several times both teams threatened to score, but then both pitchers bore down in the pinch to stop any scoring. The pitchers were equally matched. Riley permitted two hits, one walk and struck out three opposing batters, while Pluma allowed three hits, one walk, and he also struck out three opponents. It was a hard game for Riley to lose, but no baseball fan could overlook Pluma's masterful performance on the mound.

EXPECT TO BOOK LOCAL BOYS FOR HALF OF BOUTS

Bristol boys may make up one-half of the boxing show that will be held in the St. Ann's A. A. outdoor arena, Monday night. That is the arrangement that is being planned by Matchmaker Johnny Straffe.

Straffe was a little displeased with the show that was held last week, several of the boys he had booked failing to put in an appearance which made it necessary to place several substitutions on the card. These subs were not in good fighting condition and did not put on the exhibition they are capable of giving.

Tonight, Straffe intends to seek matches for Joe Ferrara, Carl Spill, Henry Varara, Steve Litus, Eddie Brown, Hokey Leighton, Ray Robinson, and Dumpty Nocito. Straffe also has several new boys in training daily and may introduce one to the crowd.

The fans are particularly pleased with the boxing being put forth by Steve Litus, St. Ann's fighter, who has been with Roebeling, Litus, for the second week, won the prize for putting up the best bout. This youth is a coming fighter but lacks defense, being wide open when swinging. When his defense is perfected he is expected to go places.

Straffe has been requested to attempt to match Eddie Brown, the Irish youngster, with Rocco Piccinini, Penmar. If this bout is booked the fight fans of this section can expect one of the best bouts ever fought here, as Piccinini and Brown fight the style that is adapted to each other.

Tickets for the show will go on sale tonight and can be secured by phoning the St. Ann's A. A. club house, 9934.

A Plea For Safety On Independence Day

swimming and by taking no chances with explosives or fireworks, and Be It Further Resolved that we call upon all public officials, including governors, mayors, chiefs of police, heads of state highway patrols and all others charged with public welfare, to remember that it is not only ironic but cruel to celebrate life and happiness by death and tragedy, and

Be It Further Resolved that we call on all churches, schools, fraternal and civic organizations and upon every individual in the country to join in this new Declaration of Independence for a new lease on life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness!

Every eleven and a half days of the average July, as many Americans are killed by accidents as lost their lives in the Revolutionary War.

July is a time of slaughter. From the time it breaks open with the Fearful Fourth until the thirty-first has swept on its way like a tornado, July sees more lives lost to accidents and more disabling accidents than any other month of the year.

Over the past five years, July's list of dead from accidental causes has been 29 per cent greater than that of the average month.

A total of 10,200 persons lost their lives last July in accidents—more than two and one half times as many as were killed in the Revolutionary War!

Approximately One Million People suffered disabling accidents last July—one out of every 130 persons in the United States.

In 1936, the latest year for which complete figures are available, July topped every other month of the year for lives lost by drowning, falls, excessive heat, electric shock and food poisoning.

One quarter of all drownings occur in July. Most of these happen in isolated lakes and rivers where there is no supervision.

Falls—in the home, at work and in the street; over weak porch railings, toys and rugs, from makeshift stepladders and unguarded stairways—take an average of 73 lives a day during the year. But during the month of July, 1936, the daily loss of life from falls jumped to 83.

July's usually clear weather is no safety panacea to motorists. Four out of five accidents occur when the weather is clear and the pavement dry.

The cost of the accidents last July has been estimated at approximately $350,000,000. But there is no figure that will express the tragedy and the downright suffering caused by the national calamity which took almost 14 lives an hour. That was July, 1937!

The Great Game of Politics

attent to himself, and it isn't going to be easy even for him.

IN THE first place, he will be subjected to a great deal of pressure from the labor leaders who made it possible for the act to pass. These—particularly the C. I. O. leaders—regard this act as their own, much as they regard the National Labor Relations Act. The A. F. of L., represented by Mr.

William Green, was strongly against the original bill, but got into line before the end. Probably it could not have been passed if Mr. Green had persisted in his opposition and certainly his enthusiasm and support were neither as great nor as early as Mr. Lewis'. And even now that the law is freed from the features to which he most objected, his mind is not wholly free from doubts about it. Nevertheless, he is intensely interested in the new administrator and undoubtedly will have a recommendation to make to the President.

HOWEVER, he will be vastly more concerned in preventing Mr. Lewis from landing his man than in landing his own—will, in fact, be satisfied if the President names a man free from affiliation with either labor faction and unafraid of either. But no one who knows him thinks this will be Mr. Lewis' attitude. He knows that the President's wage-and-hour bill would not have stood a chance of enactment but for him and he has a keen appreciation of what his support has meant to Mr. Roosevelt both in campaigns and in Congress. He not only will have a candidate for this office but will feel very strongly entitled to have him named.

HOW the President will feel about that, now he has his bill, remains to be seen. It is true that in the past, despite Mr. Lewis' private complaints, his record of getting what he wants from the President has been amazingly complete. For example, he used his name without rebuke all through the great membership drive of the C. I. O. in 1934, 1935 and 1936. He succeeded in keeping Mr. Roosevelt quiet on the sit-down strike issue, when the Vice-President and some of his closest Senatorial friends, such as Senator Byrnes, of South Carolina, pleaded with him to denounce it as unlawful. Certainly, it is through Presidential acquiescence and support that he has acquired an influence with the National Labor Relations Board sufficiently dominant to bring denunciation of that agency as a C. I. O. adjunct from the A. F. of L. leaders.

IN ADDITION, last April, when Mr. Lewis made his big bid for political power in the Pennsylvania Democratic primaries, he was successful in getting Administration support, though not in winning his fight. Altogether, the Lewis success in getting what he wants when he wants it from Mr. Roosevelt has been extraordinary. It seems particularly so when it is known that the personal relations between the two men are not close. Neither really likes the other, but their interests are tightly linked politically. They were never more so than in this wage-and-hour business. Yet to turn its administration over to an agent of Mr. Lewis would be shocking, indeed. Clearly, this is a place for the strongest and best available man. Clearly, it is a place for which the man should be drafted. Clearly, it is no place for Mr. Lewis' man or Mr. Anybody Else's man. There is reason to believe the President will feel that way about it. At least there is no excuse for assuming otherwise until some indication is given. But it is certain Mr. Lewis will have a choice for the job. Give him the wage administrator on top of the NLRB, and it wouldn't be necessary for him to reach out for more power. He would have it.
